

The Important Apostrophe: It's and Its

The words its and it's are often confused. They sound the same, but they have entirely different meanings. Its is possessive, showing something that belongs a thing. It's is a contraction of the words it is or it has. The apostrophe shows that the letter 'i' is missing or the letters "as" are missing.

Tip: To know which word is correct, try the sentence using the words it is or it has. If the sentence makes sense with either, then it's is the correct usage. If the sentence does not make sense, then use its.

Part I. Read each sentence below. If it's or its is used correctly in the sentence, circle right in the blank. If it's or its is not used correctly, circle wrong.

- | | | |
|---|-------|-------|
| 1. It's important to finish your homework. | right | wrong |
| 2. Does your cat play with its toys? | right | wrong |
| 3. She knows its too late for her to call. | right | wrong |
| 4. The earth rotates on it's axis. | right | wrong |
| 5. Ask your mother if it's all right to come with us. | right | wrong |
| 6. The alien spoke its own language. | right | wrong |
| 7. Do you see where its landed? | right | wrong |
| 8. The car rolled on it's side. | right | wrong |

Part II. In the blanks below, write the correct word: it's or its.

- I love to watch my dog chase _____ tail.
- Do you know if _____ going to rain?
- _____ song finished, the bird flew away.
- _____ my birthday!
- When _____ your turn, throw Micky the ball.
- Put the phone back in _____ case.
- Will the cow find _____ way home?
- I looked at the movie guide, and _____ already started.

The Important Apostrophe: It's and Its

The words its and it's are often confused. They sound the same, but they have entirely different meanings. Its is possessive, showing something that belongs a thing. It's is a contraction of the words it is or it has. The apostrophe shows that the letter 'i' is missing or the letters "as" are missing.

Tip: To know which word is correct, try the sentence using the words it is or it has. If the sentence makes sense with either, then it's is the correct usage. If the sentence does not make sense, then use its.

Part I. Read each sentence below. If it's or its is used correctly in the sentence, circle right in the blank. If it's or its is not used correctly, circle wrong.

- | | | |
|---|--------------|--------------|
| 1. It's important to finish your homework. | right | wrong |
| 2. Does your cat play with its toys? | right | wrong |
| 3. She knows its too late for her to call. | right | wrong |
| 4. The earth rotates on it's axis. | right | wrong |
| 5. Ask your mother if it's all right to come with us. | right | wrong |
| 6. The alien spoke its own language. | right | wrong |
| 7. Do you see where its landed? | right | wrong |
| 8. The car rolled on it's side. | right | wrong |

Part II. In the blanks below, write the correct word: it's or its.

- I love to watch my dog chase its tail.
- Do you know if it's going to rain?
- Its song finished, the bird flew away.
- It's my birthday!
- When it's your turn, throw Micky the ball.
- Put the phone back in its case.
- Will the cow find its way home?
- I looked at the movie guide, and it's already started.