

Write the Conclusion:

The Tower of London

Conclusions are an important part of writing. It is a short summary of the writing, meant to leave the reader with the basic information in the piece.

Below is an informational piece about the the Tower of London. Read the text and write and conclusion summing up the important points.

The Tower of London

I. Introduction

The Tower of London is more than tower. It is the name of a castle in the middle of London, England. It is made up of many different buildings, but takes its name from the oldest building, the White Tower. The Tower of London, known simply as the Tower, has been used as a fortress, a royal residence, a prison and many other ways.

added buildings, walls and fortifications. By around 1300, the Tower of London looked like it does today.

Over the next seven hundred years, the Tower would be used as prison for important prisoners. Two of Henry VIII's wives were beheaded at the Tower of London. A young Elizabeth I, before she became queen, was held prisoner there by her sister Mary I. Even high-ranking prisoners after World War II were held at the Tower.

II. Body

Building began on the Tower of London in 1066. William the Conqueror had just become king of England, after winning the Battle of Hastings. He needed castles as fortresses to defend his title as king. The White Tower was built around 1078. Most castles at the time were built of wood, but the White Tower was built of stone, which is how it got its name. Over the next ten years walls were added around the White Tower.

Around 1189 King Richard the Lion-Hearted began expanding the Tower of London. The kings that followed him also

The White Tower at the Tower of London

A prison was not the Tower's main function however. For many years it was a royal home; a place where an unpopular monarch would be safe. It also served as an arsenal, or a place where the weapons of war could be stored. It was also a royal mint, holding the money and valuables of the kingdom. The British crown jewels have been stored at the Tower since the 14th century.

In the 19th century the Tower became a popular attraction for tourists. By 1900 over a half a million people were visiting the Tower of London. Today, over 2.4 million people visit the Tower each year.

III. Conclusion

Write the Conclusion:

The Tower of London

Conclusions are an important part of writing. It is a short summary of the writing, meant to leave the reader with the basic information in the piece.

Below is an informational piece about the the Tower of London. Read the text and write and conclusion summing up the important points.

The Tower of London

I. Introduction

The Tower of London is more than tower. It is the name of a castle in the middle of London, England. It is made up of many different buildings, but takes its name from the oldest building, the White Tower. The Tower of London, known simply as the Tower, has been used as a fortress, a royal residence, a prison and many other ways.

added buildings, walls and fortifications. By around 1300, the Tower of London looked like it does today.

Over the next seven hundred years, the Tower would be used as prison for important prisoners. Two of Henry VIII's wives were beheaded at the Tower of London. A young Elizabeth I, before she became queen, was held prisoner there by her sister Mary I. Even high-ranking prisoners after World War II were held at the Tower.

II. Body

Building began on the Tower of London in 1066. William the Conqueror had just become king of England, after winning the Battle of Hastings. He needed castles as fortresses to defend his title as king. The White Tower was built around 1078. Most castles at the time were built of wood, but the White Tower was built of stone, which is how it got its name. Over the next ten years walls were added around the White Tower.

Around 1189 King Richard the Lion-Hearted began expanding the Tower of London. The kings that followed him also

The White Tower at the Tower of London

A prison was not the Tower's main function however. For many years it was a royal home; a place where an unpopular monarch would be safe. It also served as an arsenal, or a place where the weapons of war could be stored. It was also a royal mint, holding the money and valuables of the kingdom. The British crown jewels have been stored at the Tower since the 14th century.

In the 19th century the Tower became a popular attraction for tourists. By 1900 over a half a million people were visiting the Tower of London. Today, over 2.4 million people visit the Tower each year.

III. Conclusion

Student's answers will vary.
